PROPERTY SECURITY

A SECURITY GUARD plays an indispensable role in maintaining peace and deterring unlawful activities. Your main duty is to ensure the safety and security of the location and the people you are assigned to protect. This role involves a combination of surveillance, access control, crisis response and reporting duties, which vary based on the work setting.

EVENT SECURITY

Event Security Guards protect the premises during an event by completing activities like looking for signs of crime, identifying trespassers, apprehending criminals, reporting suspicious incidents, watching images registered by surveillance cameras, and performing first aid when necessary. A well-written resume sample for this job should mention qualifications like physical fitness, stamina, strong observational skills, being able to work under pressure, integrity, and professionalism.

EXECUTIVE PROTECTION SECURITY

An executive protection agent is a security professional who plans and executes the necessary steps to keep a high-profile client or clients safe from potential harm. They often provide complete security services and create safety measures to protect clients at their homes, place of work and other locations the client may visit. They may also drive clients to-and-from destinations, provide concierge services and keep individuals safe while in a motor vehicle.

RESIDENCIAL SECURITY

A security guard patrols a building to ensure safety and protection for the property and personnel. Often, they oversee security for a specific building or area during their shift. If there is a problem related to criminal activity, a safety issue, unauthorized personnel at the location or other similar disturbances, a security guard solves the problem or contacts authorities to help solve it. Some common duties of a security guard include:

- Greeting employees or customers
- Checking visitors in and out
- Securing assigned posts
- Patrolling stores or grounds on foot
- Patrolling in a vehicle
- Answering and making phone calls
- Reporting incidents

INDUSTRIAL SECURITY

A security guard patrols a building to ensure safety and protection for the property and personnel. Often, they oversee security for a specific building or area during their shift. If there is a problem related to criminal activity, a safety issue, unauthorized personnel at the location or other similar disturbances, a security guard solves the problem or contacts authorities to help solve it. Some common duties of a security guard include:

- Greeting employees or customers
- Checking visitors in and out
- Securing assigned posts
- Patrolling stores or grounds on foot
- Patrolling in a vehicle
